

ROBUST BAYESIAN MIXTURE MODELING

Abstract

A Bayesian treatment of mixture models is based on individual components having Student distributions, which have heavier tails compared to the exponentially decaying tails of Gaussians. The mixture of Student distribution components is characterized by a set of modeling parameters. Tractable approximations of the posterior distributions of individual modeling parameters are optimized and used to generate a data model for a set of input data.